Preface

In the following list for supplementary reading it has been the endeavor of the compiler to provide students of high-school age with reading-matter that will attract them and not repel them. No book has been included merely because it has a vague reputation as a classic, not excluded because it happens to possess some practical value. Special attention is paid to works that have recently appeared. In each case books have been examined with direct reference to the audience for which they were intended. For assistance in this examination particular thanks are acknowledged by the compiler to William Wiener, principal of Central High School; to Miss Ruth L. Ward, the Librarian of Central High School, to the many members of the Central High School faculty who have given counsel, and to the authorities of the Free Public Library, Newark, N. J. (John Cotton Dana, Librarian), in particular to Miss Ruth M. Wright.

As points of interest in the present compilation may be mentioned the system of extra credits in other subjects than English, the list of vocational books, the lists of travel books, the lists of modern plays and collections of verse, the list of books on Dr. Johnson, the list of books dealing with great men and women, the list covering the great letter-writers, and the lists of books on various aspects of American life and literature.

Suggestions for the improvement of this list and corrections of errors found in it will be welcomed by the compiler.

MAX J. HERZBERG.

DIRECTIONS TO THE PUPIL FOR BOOK REPORTS

1. Book reports as a rule fall into these three sections: facts about the author, summary, and opinion.

In the first, a brief account is given of the author of the book. In the case of writers who are dead, or of famous living writers, facts for this part of the report may be obtained from any good encyclopedia or from a history of literature. Where the author is still living and is not very well known, data may be inaccessible, and in such cases this part of the report would be omitted.

In part two, a summary of the contents of the book should be given. This is simple enough in the case of a novel, a biography, or a narrative poem, but more difficult for other kinds of books. The following suggestions may be of value:

(1). In writing any report, imagine that you are speaking to some definite person—a friend or a classmate perhaps. Tell him briefly the contents of the book. Word your account in such a way that he will know whether or not it is worth his while to read the book.

(2) In reporting on fiction, narrative poetry, and drama, point out the time of the story, the setting, the historical background (if any). Name the opening situation, the chief events, the climax of the story, the concluding situation. Describe the most interesting characters of the book. Does the story turn out as you expected? Might it have turned out differently? Could any parts of the book be omitted with advantage? Would you like to hear more about some of the characters? Do they strike you as real? Was any part of the book intensely exciting? Any part very dull? Why? If the book read is a play, would you like to see it performed? Why?

(3) In reporting on books of short stories, give a concise account of all you have read—summarizing each plot in a sentence perhaps. Tell how the stories differ in type, in interest, in subject-matter, in style, etc. Mention some striking situations, some attractive characters, etc.

(4) In reporting on books of travel and outdoor life, first summarize briefly the subject-matter. Does the author give you clear impressions of scenes and places? Mention some particularly good descriptions. Is the author superficial or profound? Is his style pleasing or difficult?

(5) In reporting on orations, first summarize the subject-matter. Afterwards state what the purpose of the speaker was. Did he accomplish his purpose? What audience did he address? Is he persuasive? Difficult to follow? Logical? Has he helped you in the making-up of your own arguments? Compare the oration with others you have read.

(6) In reporting on books of practical value or of scientific interest or of pure information, your summary should show what you consider to be of most importance in the volume. Comment on the style, on the clearness or lack of clearness in the arrangement, on the accuracy of the author, etc.

(7) In reporting on lyrical poetry, tell what you believe to be the theme of each of the poems you have read. Compare one poem with another in respect to interest, melody, beauty of the pictures presented, etc. What are the meters and stanza-forms employed? Quote some lines that appeal to you because of their beauty of sound. A volume of poems by a single author should be reviewed in a way to bring out the author's characteristics, his ability as a poet, his attraction or lack of attraction for you personally, his best work, etc.

(8) In reporting on collections of essays, state whether they are written on one general subject or on many subjects. Is the tone formal or familiar? Are the themes literary, scientific, informational, entertaining, general? Is the style pleasing or cold? Compare one essay with another as to interest, subject-matter, etc.

(9) In reporting on biography, repeat what is said about the birth and education of the subject of the volume. Go on to give details regarding his achievements and his traits of character.

In the third part, you should give your opinion of the book and why you hold that opinion. You are to state, honestly and frankly, whether or not you like the book, and for what reason. This is perhaps the most important part of the report, since it is the part in which you have a chance to express your own views. Remember, above all, that for everything you say you should have a reason. You will find that comparing the book you are reporting on with other books you have read helps to make matters clear.

2. It is often useful to construct a brief outline of your report before you begin.

3. Special questions for each book read will in most instances be set by teachers at the time you are giving your report. The object of these questions will be to test how accurately and carefully you have read the book you are reporting on.

4. When a book report is given orally, the same plan should be pursued as is indicated under the first heading above. In an oral report, however, remember that in a way you are advising your fellow-students whether or not they should read the book about which you are telling them. Your report, in other words, is distinctly practical in such cases.

5. Some newspapers and magazines publish book reviews—reports, that is, on newly issued books. You will find it instructive to read some of these, in order to learn how trained critics write reports. Here is an example:

"Prof. W. S. Davis, the well-known writer of the classical novels, 'A Friend of Caesar' and 'A Victor at Salamis,' has prepared an elementary handbook on Greek Private Antiquities, under the title 'A Day in Old Athens' (Allyn & Bacon, $1.25). The book purports to set forth the experiences at Athens of a visitor in the year 360 B. C. The tourist lands at Piraeus, follows the outside road to Athens, visits the market-place, then the home of a well-to-do gentleman. In connection with this he gives all the necessary information as to the various members of the family —shows the position occupied by the women and the slaves, with chapters also on the children. A visit to the law courts, which are described, is waived in favor of a session of the public assembly in the Pnyx, with its wrangling orators and excitable listeners. Other chapters treat of the physicians, trade and manufactures, amusements, country life, etc. The style is vivacious, the information reasonably accurate, and the whole presentation interesting. The book will find its widest use in the schools, but it will also appeal to older readers who desire an interesting rather than a learned sketch of life in Athens."

6. You will find occasionally that alongside a book stands the name of a subject—History, for example. This means that you will be given extra credit in another subject for reading the book so marked. In all such cases, your report will be marked by your English teacher and then passed on for another mark to the instructor who is to give you the extra credit. You must apply for this credit at the head of your book report. Here is a good opportunity for you to "kill two birds with one stone."

7. Head your paper in writing book reports, as follows:

NAME GRADE OF ENGLISH DATE

AUTHOR: TITLE OF BOOK

Be careful to plan your time so that you will be able to finish the report. Do not spend too much time on the summary. Your opinion, (given in the third part) is the most important part of your report.

8. Here are some miscellaneous suggestions:

(1) Read carefully the titles of books as given in this book-list. Sometimes you are required to read only part of a book.

(2) If you read a book that seems to you suitable for extra credit in some other subject that you are taking, apply to the teacher of this subject for the credit.

(3) Some of the books included in this list are obtainable in the book-room. Your teacher will tell you which books these are. If you cannot get a book at the library, try instead to get a book from the book-room.

(4) Do not confine yourself to books under a single heading, "humor," for example. Many books besides those under this heading may be very amusing. In fact, you will probably find the majority of the volumes attractive and interesting.

(5) Look for one book after another until you find one in. Don't keep on trying to get just a single title. Remember (as was said above) that almost all the books are likely to interest you.

FIRST YEAR

Group 5: Great Men and Women (1B)

And now I must repeat one thing, namely, that the first use of education is to enable us to consult with the wisest and the greatest men on all points of earnest difficulty: that to use books rightly is to go to them for help; to appeal to them when our own knowledge and power fail; to be led by them into wider sight, purer conception than our own, and to receive from them the united sentence of the judges and councils of all time, against our solitary and unstable opinions.—JOHN RUSKIN.

Group 3: Non-Fiction, Chiefly Biographies (3C)

Consider what you have in the smallest chosen library. A company of the wisest and wittiest men that could be picked out of all civil countries, in a thousand years, have set in best order the results of their learning and wisdom. The men themselves were hid and inaccessible, solitary, impatient of interruption, fenced by etiquette; but the thought which they did not uncover to their bosom friend is here written out in transparent words to us, the strangers of another age.—EMERSON.

FOURTH YEAR

Group 7: Fiction (4A)

Richard gave up his companions, and retired into himself, where he was growing to be lord of kingdoms; where Beauty was his handmaid, and History his minister, and Time his ancient harper, and sweet Romance his bride: where he walked in a realm vaster and more gorgeous than the great Orient, peopled with the heroes that have been. For there is no princely wealth and no loftiest heritage, to equal this early one that is made bountifully common to so many.—GEORGE MEREDITH.
